

NTR 690 : Directed Research I

This course is one of the culminating courses of the MS in nutrition program research sequence. Students complete a faculty mentored year-long research project. The course involves preparing a literature review, designing the methods for a research project, developing data collection tools, submitting an IRB form, and collecting data. Prerequisites: statistics and research methods. The course must be taken during the last year of the MS program.